As it turns out, both were on a panel at this year's College Republicans National Convention, discussing what it's like to be a minority at a liberal college. If you aren't familiar with Leroy and Jason, the former is a tenured professor of chemistry at the University of Illinois and the latter is a substitute teacher who graduated from Johns Hopkins with a degree in neuroscience. On the panel were Wendy Montgomery (pro-gun rights, NRA member), Dr. Jillian Jordan (pro-gun control), and Caleb Lyon (pro-gun rights, student). It's always great to get a liberal perspective on things from a pro-gun perspective. I've long been intrigued by the idea that we can be pro-life, pro-gay marriage, pro-war in the former case and anti-war, pro-gay marriage, and pro-peace in the latter.

I expected a small device that would be easy to use, but was very disappointed after using it for 2 days. It is too big, takes up too much space and is pretty useles. There are only 2 settings, "freestyle" and "manual". When set to "freestyle" you can do anything, touch things on the monitor to scratch it, push objects like metal pans onto it, etc. When set to "manual" you have to click on a spot on the monitor to scratch it. The scratches are not as long as I expected and do not look like they are deep, just barely visible. They are very hard to see or feel. This is a good idea for an inexpensive invention, but definitely not worth the money.var Curry2 = require('./internal/curry2'); var _isNumber = require('./internal/_isNumber'); / * Returns a function that accepts an array of `n` elements and `k` key * value pairs. * * @func * @memberOf R * @since v0.2.0 * @category Function * @sig [a] -> (n -> K -> a) * @param {Number} n The number of elements 648931e174
