Film LittleBigPlanet 3 trailer for PS4 with gameplay, level editors,. iNSPire Climber.by Duncan Geere @DuncanGeere Sep 25, 2014 (Image credit: Carlos Alvarez) The world of football is full of sadness and defeat. It's a mood that usually travels the length and breadth of the land. But when you're winning, and winning big, your mood is different. Victory in football can create a powerful spirit; in little more than a week the 2014-15 season has turned upside down. There are five matches left, and it's high time we looked at who are the bookmakers' favourites to lift the Premier League crown. Top of the pile is Liverpool, who head into their final five matches with the most bookies' points of all the big sides, and a potential return to the Champions League will be a milestone few could have predicted back in September. Sadio Mane's last-gasp winner at the King Power Stadium was a picture-perfect conclusion to a gritty victory, and one which will go down as a special memory for this famous Anfield crowd. For these early days of the campaign Liverpool are the team of the season so far, combining a defence which has been dogged with consistency with an attack that have gone from strength to strength. A defeat at the Britannia Stadium this afternoon will be a timely reminder of the shackles which have restricted the Reds this season, but this is a side that has new blood and who can't resist back-to-back home games. Will they too take the scalps of some of the richest and the best? When it comes to second-best, it's tough to look past Man United. They have been the Premier League's story so far, and they have a chance to complete the
